ABOUT BALI

Bali is both an island and a province of Indonesia. The island is just south of the equator and is home to just over 4 million people. Surrounded by a coral reef, Bali is a lush, green island with some of the most beautiful white and black sand beaches in the world. The island is about 153 km from east to west and 112 km from north to south. The central mountains include an active volcano, Mount Agung. Bali's ample rainfall and fertile soil create highly productive coffee, rice and vegetable crops.

Tourism is very important to Bali. Being so close to the equator, the climate is fairly stable all year. Daytime temperatures range from 20 to 33 degrees Centigrade in the lower altitudes. In the mountains, the temperatures are somewhat cooler. Most tourism is focused in the southern part of the island near beaches and larger towns. World-class hotels maintain a 65% occupancy rating but during the peak season, some hotels are fully booked. In 2012 Bali had over 2.8 million foreign and 5 million domestic tourist visits. The excellent beaches, international and local restaurants, and the friendliness of the people attract tourists to this beautiful island.

'Asia Pacific Handbook of Contemporary Research' is a thorough collection of academic research on different areas. Please submit your book chapter to be included in the volume, 2. Details can be found on our website.

We invite you all to participate in our future conferences where you can :

1- Strengthen your professional ties: this may lead to publications and job opportunities – an invaluable opportunity for post-PhD professionals.

2- Receive feedback and constructive critique on your ideas: benefit from the audience engaging with your content rather than focusing on your punctuation and references.

3- Refine your communication skills: move from your "isolating" research experience to a more collaborative and exchange of perspectives.

4- Participate in our conference and publish your research directly through the conference proceedings and journals. Don't miss this great opportunity to get your work out there!

All submitted papers will be peer reviewed and published in the conference proceeding to promote the prominent (and emerging) voices within your field of research.
